

On Holy Friday, one of your friends invites you to go see a movie you've been really wanting to see. You make the decision to go to church instead.	You are having a tough time with a bully at school and are afraid to tell anybody about it. You decide to pray and look to the scriptures to help you with your situation. Because of this, you are able to talk to your teacher about it and confront the bully.
You've been staying up late each night of the summer and gotten out of the habit of reading your scripture and saying your evening prayers. You'd rather be watching TV or playing video games. After awhile, you notice that your grumpy a lot and snap easily at your family members.	Your younger brother wants you to spend time with him. You usually tell him that you're too busy. But then you decide to play with him and read to him. You have fun together and realize that he is a great brother.
You gossiped to your best friend about a girl in your class even though you don't even know if what you heard was true. You decide to apologize to your friend and the girl in your class and during confession, you ask for forgiveness.	You make it a goal to read one chapter of the bible each night with your family. Some nights you are all tired, but stick with your goal. In the process, you learn so much and feel closer to your family through the discussions that you have after the reading.
Your parents told you that you are not allowed to watch "R" rated movies. While spending the night at a friends house, you watch one anyway.	You need to make a tough decision about an issue at school. You listen to other friends giving you advice and make your decision based on what they said. You never decided to pray about it, but relied on your own thoughts and those of your friends. Afterwards, you realized that you made the wrong decision.
An elderly lady in your neighborhood seems really lonely. You decide to go over one day a week and visit with her and read to her.	One of your friends starts talking badly about God and how he doesn't really listen to prayers. You remember a verse from the Bible and talk to your friend about it. You are able to share your own experiences with prayer and reading the scriptures.

